

What Gets Sheryl Marshall Psyched?

- A. Leading the venture capital vanguard by bringing backing and expertise to female and minority-owned businesses.
- B. Using the market knowledge she earned during her 22 years as a stockbroker to build a fund and add long-term value to her portfolio companies.
- C. The infectious enthusiasm generated when good companies happen to good people.
- D. The excitement and the newness embodied by the contemporary art scene she and her husband support in Boston.

E. Her firm's new NVCA membership

To Sheryl, NVCA is the “blue-chip” organization for venture capitalists. To be a player, you’ve got to be a member. And don’t get her started on connections and the consolidated voice NVCA provides on Capitol Hill. Add the invaluable industry data she gets with her membership and—well—there’s a lot to get excited about.

For more information about NVCA, visit www.nvca.org.

Sheryl is a founding partner of Axxon Capital (1998), a Boston-based venture firm that targets women and minority owned businesses in the New Economy.
